Course Objectives

Service-learning is a form of experiential learning that involves students in a cycle of service, knowledge application, and reflection. This course is designed to provide sociology students with a variety of hands-on community service-learning opportunities. Under the guidance of the course instructor and mentors who are alumni teachers in sociology, students will collaborate with community partners in different settings to complete specific projects and volunteer activities that address the needs of particular social groups. These activities may include conducting surveys, teaching, tutoring, sharing knowledge, designing a series of lessons on a specific topic, or tackling a particular problem faced by the selected social group in a real-world context.

Students will use the sociological imagination to identify a problem or topic, gather information, design teaching and learning objectives and outcomes, and adopt appropriate delivery strategies. They will then collaborate with their fellows and community partners to implement the plan. Upon completion of the practicum, students will engage in structured in-class discussions to put their sociological knowledge in dialogue with the experiential input from the service-learning setting, activities, and community partners.

Learning outcomes

Upon the completion of the course, students are able to:

1. consolidate and deepen the sociological knowledge/ skills they have acquired from the primary curriculum by applying them in the self-designed projects;
2. cultivate a sympathetic understanding of the social needs of disadvantaged groups in context and engage with outside partners to address social issues and develop social resolutions
3. appreciate the value of serving the community and understand how sociological knowledge could contribute to the improvement of the community.
